AN OPEN LETTER TO ALL EDITORS

LAWRENCE M. LANDE, president of

Decarie Blvd. at Van Horne • EX. 1156

Dear Mr. Editor:—

From time to time, especially of recent date, I have noticed in your column many editorials on the ever increasing number of traffic accidents in this City. Is not your solution of stricter laws, more laws, greater enforcement of laws, — in plain words putting "the cart before the horse" — and in this Province without a light? Laws will not make safe drivers or courteous drivers. The right form of instruction will do it;—such as knowing more than something about how to drive a car, — the psychology of driving a car, — and the rules of the road; instruction that has been tried and tested with excellent results by some of the progressive schools in the United States, resulting in insurance rates being reduced in such districts. What a medium television would be!

Believe me Sir, it is much easier to make a law than it is to make a law abiding citizen; much easier to construct a school than to make constructive changes in its curriculum. That much I know, I have tried to get a hearing from the School Boards on this subject, more than once and it is more or less pounding the air.

We live in a congested community to-day. We live with the machine, and the more power man has, the more responsibility he has to his fellowman. But that responsibility can only be taught at home, or failing that in the school.

Mr. Editor, why not start at the right end? It is far less costly even though more difficult. But this difficulty of giving something to our youngsters more than laws will surely repay the effort.

At the beginning of this new year, it is our fervent wish that something constructive will be done for safe and happy driving.

Sincerely,

Lawrence M. Lande

The Birthday Of The World

On the New Year, according to Jewish tradition, we observe the world's birthday. How good it is and how characteristic it is of the faith of our fathers to speak of the end of the year not as the death of the year, but rather as the birthday of the world.

This emphasis laid on birth rather than on death, is the message we most urgently are in need of today. For, alas, multitudes are of the belief that we are now at one of the world-end periods; that civilization is on a march to death. Many are the signs that do indicate that our present civilization is collapsing — the breakdown of private and public morals, the international bitterness, the anxiety and deep uneasiness which have taken possession of men's hearts. All these and more have brought about a world beclouded by mounting gloom and despair.

What a glorious hour, this is therefore for the historic religions which have witnessed world depressions in the past to be of comfort and hope in the dark present. Judaism in particular, which has witnessed scores of civilizations go down to oblivion, declares in no uncertain words that the world is not coming to an end despite the seeming destruction and the fear of world annihilation, that all the sorrow and pain of the present constitute the birth throes of a new world being born.

We might rightly ask at this time, what has caused this deep gloomy period in human history, when fear and fright have come so to overwhelm us? And in the face of so much gloom where do we find the signs of world rebirth? There is no doubt that our society is dominated by a sense of death, because of the loss of faith, religious faith to begin with. Man liveth by faith.

Losing faith, he has lost his hold upon life. Because multitudes have dethroned God and have forgotten to find strength in the ancient Hebrew affirmation, "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? The Lord is the stronghold of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?" these are shuddering with fear and are obsessed by a sense of world death.

Still other faiths mankind has lost, it would seem. As so many recent thinkers have pointed out, that for a number of generations now, it was not religious faith that has dominated man's heart, but rather secular faiths and because these have proven to be false gods, millions are thus driven to the belief of hopelessness. Up to almost yesterday, science was the God who was so much worshipped rather than the God, The Holy One of Israel, the Universal Father.

There is much evidence abroad to indicate that mankind no longer looks to science for its salvation. Despite the glorious blessings science has brought to mankind, in physical comfort, in the freedom from drudgery, in the helpfulness toward the alleviation of pain and the lengthening of life, science in the minds of modern [illegible] now as a fearful demon because of its greatest discovery [illegible] power. This greatest discovery has brought about the [illegible] fear in the world and [illegible] all mankind is paralyzed by [illegible] child of earth and heaven, will yet use his intelligence, his God-given intelligence to convert the atomic forces into a blessing for mankind; that these may yet usher in a new age of hope and comradeship, paving the way though the road be rocky, to peace and world brotherhood. Let people everywhere affirm with the Jewish people that this is the birthday of the world.

Still another faith which has broken down and which has resulted in disillusionment for mankind is that of Socialism. How hopeful millions have been that Socialism would prove to be mankind's salvation. Toilers throughout the world believed that when Socialism would be established, then hunger and war would vanish. Now in our day a Socialist state has come into being. The Soviet Union, founded on the teachings of Engels and Marx, has not brought about a new world; rather has it restored the tyranny of Czarism. While the idealistic teachings of Socialism have not been applied in Russia, nevertheless the Soviet Union as a Socialist state is the symbol of a secular faith that has resulted in disenchantment.

Those who had visioned Communism as a man's salvation because Western society was dying, have now found Communism a false faith and a false god. This, too, has contributed to the hopelessness regarding our world's advance and world's vitality, and, what is more, the struggle between Soviet Communism and Western Capitalism has driven fear into the hearts of millions that this combat will drag all mankind into a war of death for civilization.

Yet, despite this political struggle, there are many hidden forces at work toward world unity. Of course, ours is a period of great danger, but it is also a period of great promise. We commence a co-existence of both Capitalism and Communism in the world. Peace is more desirable today than ever because our world has indeed become but a little habitation. Distances have vanished and the aeroplane and hydrogen bomb are forcing us into world unity. But more than these there are the religious, the cultural and spiritual forces at work that are ever uniting more closely the various races and peoples of the earth.

Peace-minded men are linking their religious, educational and their international efforts in building world unity. The work of the United Nations is a continuing process and not a series of single dramatic acts. It offers much promise and toward its great and noble work, we must ever display patience and fortitude. Each individual must strive out for the Universal in terms of his own creative efforts. We know that the moral law operates everywhere.

God has not discriminated between man and man in giving to the universe light, air and grain. These gifts are indeed for all. Peace-loving men everywhere are beginning to recognize this, and to cast aside discrimination. How vital it is now that statesmen of nations respond to whatever invitation to negotiate in the cause of world peace, for mankind is weary of the "sunless depths of the shadow of war."

Too long mankind has dwelt in an atmosphere of gloom and millions of lives are thus devoid of healthy mindedness. All the more important then is the [illegible] of the Jewish New Year,

every friday

"Sometimes when people censure me,
I tell them without rancor
That for what it cost me to be true,
I might have had an anchor."

In Jewish tradition the Jewish New Year is the birthday of the world, not the Jewish world but the whole world at large: God's rule is nothing less than universal and the brotherhood of man is not seclusive or exclusive but is inclusive of every human being. As befits such an occasion, the sound of the ram's horn comes from all the corners of the earth to arouse the conscience of mankind against what is wrong and for what is right. In effect this sound lingers in the air for ten days because the good resolutions of the New Year are not to be laid away at sunset. Far from it.

There follow the High Holydays which are the awesome days of repentance. Then it is that regeneration sets in on the basis of the change of heart that the New Year day itself was able to effect. Since Judaism is a creed and a philosophy of life which encircles every aspect of the life of the individual, such regeneration means the fruitful effort to translate the basic moral code into private behavior in the home, in the street, in politics, in the markets of trade, and in all human relations, a program for which ample rules have been provided over the centuries since the ten commandments laid the foundation.

This New Year is different from other New Years in this part of the world because during the High Holydays The Jewish Theological Seminary of America, in New York, will conduct a Conference on Moral Standards to mark its fiftieth anniversary. This will be the first of its kind for it will be on a comprehensive basis and in the hope that it will help to initiate a movement toward the moral awakening of mankind in a time of widespread corruption and disregard of accustomed moral standards. More than one hundred American experts will study the present health of these standards in eight major fields, those of government, business and labor, education, science, creative expression, family and private behavior, religious institutions and mass media, and the findings will be those of the best thinking available in the country, brought together by Jews for the general welfare of the nation.

This is a courageous and commendable move on the part of the Seminary, which is aimed at high goals and not too proud to make a small beginning. All around it seem lowered moral tone, lax standards reflected in government, callous expectation of corruption and failure to demand integrity, and a cynical discrepancy between precept, or the profession of national principles, and practice, or their application, all of which denotes a confusion and floundering about with regard to what is right and what is wrong in dealings with fellow citizens and with other nations.

The Seminary is launching its effort on turbulent waters. The world it is worried about is involved in a struggle for the survival of its free and democratic way of life. It must resist the aggression of Communist totalitarianism. It should also take care for the moral health of man in the next half century. There are vast organizations for the mobilization of manpower and its needs but there is no equal concern for the moral standards of this generation although the survival of mankind might some day depend upon the morality of a policy or decision of the free nations.

At a time when the Seminary longs to help the world to achieve a higher level there is not only the seering effect of recent past wars but a present war to contribute to continuing lowered national tone. War is unsettling and a war for survival employs methods of trickery and the like which introduce inevitably a seeping bad influence into civilian life and administration, causing a decline in the standard of ethics. How long can such an environment stand the drain on its spiritual health and still measure up to giving moral guidance? or even care whether it does or not?

Confucius said that the example which the governor of a province sets is far more important than his official acts and utterances. It is easy to agree. An official act can be set aside or undone. Leadership with candor, insight, and sense of honor and responsibility might be able to block the gradual deterioration of society so apparent today or, even to reverse it through strong dynamic power. Perhaps the undertaking of the Seminary will set off such a human spark toward striving for quality and saving the pieces that give meaning to life.

Now We Have A New Year

BY RABBI NORMAN N. SHAPIRO, BETH TZEDEC CONGREGATION, TORONTO

I am writing this High Holiday message on August 18 in Minneapolis as I am en route to Toronto. The month of Elul in the Hebrew calendar was ushered in this week and has always spelled a period of contemplation for the Jew, a time for visiting cemeteries, an occasion for reflecting over the happenings of the preceding year. In this month there is an intermingling of joy, sadness and solemnity. It follows on the heels of the month of Av in the Hebrew calendar, during which time "Tisha B'ab" stands out as a Fast Day commemorating the destruction of the Temple.

Yet our rabbis tell us that the day upon which the Holy Temple in Jerusalem was destroyed, the Messiah was born, i.e. out of the ruins of the "Churban" (the destruction) the future redeemer of Israel was to arise. The Jew was not to immerse himself completely in sorrow even as he observed the saddest day in his history when God's glory and the object of Jewish worship, the Holy Temple in Jerusalem, was destroyed, first by the Babylonians in the sixth century before the Common Era, and then by the Romans in the first century of the Common era.

The Temple was the symbol of Jewish life and strength. Yet the Jew was asked to believe and convert a day of mourning into one of hope for the future, wherein a Messiah would help transform these ashes into a beautiful temple once again. The Sabbaths following the ninth of Av are referred to as the "Seven Sabbaths of Consolation" as each Saturday, the prophetic portion recited in Synagogues is advisedly taken from the prophet Isaiah, whose words of comfort and hope, even in the midst of adversity, enunciated as they were over 2500 years ago, have to this day a modern ring and application.

The ability to smile and to keep going, the drive to accomplish great things even when adversity is heaped upon us, should serve as a guiding goal for us throughout the days and months which lie ahead. What has possibly induced this trend of thought in me is an article I have recently been reviewing about Edward Gibbon who lived over 200 years ago and who wrote "The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire".

Misfortune smiled on Gibbon and poor health led to his writing of a classic in Roman history. As a sickly boy of fourteen, he became interested in the causes leading to the fall of the Roman Empire, and he thereafter dedicated twenty years of his life to writing this monumental work. His first emotion upon completing a task which had taken him all of twenty years was an indescribable feeling of freedom, co-mingled with a sense of elation in the fame he believed he had acquired. Then his mood changed. Edward Gibbon realized upon completing his task, how much he would miss the work that had so interested him. Yet the story of Gibbon's life is a series of misfortunes and adversities which turned out to his advantage.

As we approach the High Holiday period, we too often go through an almost perfunctory searching and, recollecting last year's reverses and adversities, we blame God for all our setbacks. Yet it would seem to me that the greater stress should be on overcoming our misfortunes and making the most out of life. We cannot and dare not live in the shadow of tragedy. A tragedy leaves enough sorrow, as it is, in its wake, but to dwell on this unhappiness all of our lives means to yield to life's sorrows unnecessarily.

We now have a new year to look forward to. No one can predict the future. The prophet Amos said 2500 years ago: I'm not a prophet nor am I the son of a prophet. None of us can foretell with unerring accuracy what will take place during the coming year. Yet it behooves all of us to understand and to know that we must capitalize on our mistakes and profit by our misfortunes.

A Korean truce has been signed that seemed so remote and unrealizable months ago and hopes are beginning to perk up for a better world. We Jews have been incorrigible optimists for centuries. Now we forge ahead hoping for Israel's strengthening economically, socially, and politically. On this continent we hope for the day when the world will be established through God's justice and mankind will call upon His name. This is the day that we keep hoping for and will ultimately achieve.

Jewish life in our own country and community must be strengthened in the fields of Jewish edu-

The ORT Story

BY MORRIS B. SIEGELMAN, OF MONTREAL, NATIONAL EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF THE CANADIAN ORT FEDERATION

The story of ORT which starts in 1880 can only be told against the background of the then existing circumstances. The largest Jewish population was at that time in Russia and all but 200,000 of a total of over 5,000,000 lived in designated western provinces known as the "Pale of Settlement". Here only was the Jew permitted to eke out his restricted and limited livelihood. Though an agricultural economy, Jews were not permitted to own land. In a land that was awakening politically, they were not permitted to hold office. In a land which had just opened its doors to western ideas, they were hampered when they sought admission to institutions of higher learning. Only practicing artisans were permitted to live outside the "pale" and this prohibition applied as well to the children of the artisan as to others. Unless they too were practicing craftsmen, their place of abode had to be within the "pale". It was as though a huge ghetto wall surrounded the entire area and a specific skill was the only passport to the world beyond its gates.

Meanwhile, the day of the machine, which was already in the full flush in England, France, and Germany, was just creeping over the horizon in Russia. Peasants hearing the first hum of industrialization were flocking to the cities to find their place in the new plan. Only the Jew, without land and now without customers in his darkened kretchma, looked on the new day with dread. His crust of bread grew smaller and his potato soup thinner.

But just as the machine age which, with small and slow steps had finally come to the Russian Border, so the wave of liberalism which swept over Europe in the mid-century, bringing new thinking and new reforms finally and almost spent, swept across Russian boundaries and found a resting place in the Court of Czar Alexander II. For the Jew, prominent Jewish leaders were able to translate this new social philosophy into ameliorative practicalities.

Baron Horace de Gunsbourg, an illustrious son of an illustrious father, both long active in philanthrophy in the Jewish and non-Jewish community, together with Samuel Poliakoff, who, if he had been able to accept the official Church of Russia, could also have had the National Treasurership, and Professor Nicholas Bakst and others no less distinguished, conceived the idea of equipping Jews with such new technical and manual skills as would provide a passport to liberate them from their inadequate self-support and downward spiralling conditions. The idea ripened into the Society for the Propagation of Labor, which name in the Russian appeared in an abbreviated form O. R. T. and which was later given an English counterpart "Organization for Rehabilitation through Training".

Alexander II and Russian liberalism came to a simultaneous end when the former was assassinated in 1881. Alexander III, either because of the instruction learned from the assassins or because he had a share in the lessons, restored Mother Russia to her more usual reactionary self. Anti-Semitism, an accustomed mode of expression taken for granted earlier became one again and the granting of a Government Charter for which ORT had petitioned in 1880 was postponed indefinitely. Jewish fortune, which rides the crest and trough of the wave together with the flow and ebb of the liberal spirit, wallowed again and, though ORT continued to function, it did so only as an advisory and counselling body. In 1905 Russia was again touched by the spirit of liberalism. The Charter was finally granted and ORT set forth again on its original mission.

The people of the book were loath to exchange their accustomed place at the reading desk for one at the work bench. Here and there an individual, who perhaps had felt the pinch of necessity more keenly or who had less taste and talent for books, sought help in finding new avenues of earning a livelihood. Each one received all the help he could utilize, learning, tools, instruments and machines. The apprentice system was given impetus. Master craftsmen were helped to refine their skills and improve their ability to pass on their knowledge to their [illegible] trained supply [illegible] and [illegible]

About Stained Glass Windows

BY ELLEN SIMON, 30 SOUTH DRIVE, TORONTO, AND NEW YORK

(The following article is reprinted from the International House Quarterly of the International House Association in New York. The author, Ellen Simon, studied at the Art Students League in New York. A Canadian, she also attended the Ontario College of Art, the New School for Social Research in New York, and studied glass in the studios of Joey Nicolas and Yvonne Williams. Her work includes Sidney Hillman Memorial window, at Hastings-on-Hudson, N.Y.; windows at the Holy Blossom Synagogue and Trinity College, in Toronto. She also does book and magazine illustration, and she has lithographs in the permanent collection in Vienna, N.Y. Public Library, National Gallery of Canada, Brooklyn Museum, and the Toronto Art Gallery. Miss Simon is the daughter of Mrs. L. Simon, 30 South Drive, Toronto.)

"What is your field?"

"I make stained glass windows."

"Oh, how interesting — "

The tone of this response may vary from one of respect and awe to a shocked dismissal of the subject.

The respectful questioner is glad to be explicit. He speaks of the splendor of Chartres. He thinks of the age of faith, the romance of the guilds, the dignity of a craft. Or perhaps of some lovely glowing color in the church or synagogue of his boyhood. He may have been unaware that windows are being made by living people, and be astonished to find one of these creatures on the loose, looking like anybody else.

The negative response may be just as well fortified. It may be a matter of a bilious window disfiguring a man's hallway, or his otherwise beautiful church. Or he may relegate the craft to a bygone era — to the Dark Ages — associating it with serfdom and superstition and outmoded criteria for art and life. "We can all read now," he will say. "Who needs the poor man's Bible?" Or: "This is the age of steel and simplicity; lead and decoration have no place in it."

There is certainly something valid in each of these reactions, something worth thinking about. There is also something wrong. Something unrelated, perhaps, based on personal connotations, half-knowledge or preconceived ideas. The result is a great deal of blindness both to ugliness and to beauty. Perhaps a little survey of the glassman's world may help dispel some of the haze that hides his works.

Let us consider how a window is made.

First come the color sketch. This is based on a study of the building — its purpose, architecture, and the orientation of the window. The designer may be left some freedom as to subject and treatment, or these may be rigidly specified. Sometimes the directive states clearly that the donor of the window is very fond of pink, or likes a lot of detail! The budget for the window will also affect the design. It need not affect the quality; there are ways of saving time and material which are in keeping with good workmanship. The resulting simplicity of style may sometimes be the most appropriate.

The sketch is "accepted." Here we must skip a significant chapter.

The actual making of a stained glass window has hardly changed in 700 years. The design is enlarged to a full-size "cartoon" or working drawing. With this as a guide, paper patterns are made from which each shape of colored glass is cut. (Color and glass have been fused in the melting pot, and handblown by traditionally trained craftsmen.) It comes to the glassman in sheets, slabs and rondels of beautifully varied hues and depths. Bubbles and striations split and bend the light, making it sparkle and vibrate. Choosing glass for a windows is a challenge and an adventure. There are powerful laws of color and light to be learned here! Light radiates differently through different colors. It "devours" or reduces all black lines, making them appear narrower than they actually are. Glass colors respond to one another and to the slightest change in weather with quicksilver sensitivity. This brittle and inanimate substance can seem bewitchingly and tantalizingly alive.

To control and modify this wild "life", and to define the lines of the drawing, a "paint" is applied to the glass — a blackish vitreous pigment which fuses with the glass when fired in a kiln. With this the solid lines of the cartoon are traced onto each piece of glass, and a thin wash of it, or "matt", is laid on with a big badger brush.

What Is The Trend In Art Today?

BY RACHEL L. BARLEY, OF QUEBEC CITY

Today nearly everyone is art-conscious, from the Sunday painter who goes out adventuring in color once a week, to the perennial admirer of anything painted. Becoming the owner of a first painting makes of the average man an authority and critic who takes himself very seriously. Ancestral tin-types have been replaced by "oils". The family album has disappeared and art, good or bad, takes its place in the modern home.

And one asks, "Why has art such a fascination for the man of today?" Is it the imperishable quality, a magical quality, to hold time back? To make centuries seem as moments? Is art an emotional necessity and a stimulus to to richer living? And what is the trend in art today?

The artist today is sincere in his efforts and is confused in his interpretation of life, as is his friend, the non-artist, who tries to evaluate the creations of the artist. There is an urge for the unusual, the sensational, the "pattern" rather than the creative inspiration. An acquaintance acquired her first painting recently. "Come and see it", she said enthusiastically, "it is painted in geometric triangles." Does that make it a work of art? Do geometric contortions make of a painting a work of beauty? Or should the answer be that a work of art is such not because it is modern; nor because it is ancient but because it is an expression, sincere and deep, of human feeling.

Returning from a recent trip to Italy, Henry Taylor, head of the Metropolitan Museum, reflected that perhaps the most conspicuous quality of contemporary art was the extreme loneliness of its author, which it reflects. "To visit anyone of a score of recent exhibitions," he said, "leaves the impression that one has been looking into a brilliantly illuminated window of a hardware store on a cold winter's night. There we see row upon row of precision instruments, circular saws arranged in geometric patterns and pneumatic tools wreathed in coils of electric cable; each item however is inert and impotent unless it is plugged into the wall to receive the impulse of some source of unseen power. The spectacle is as exciting as it is unrewarding and and frustrating. The answer lies in our hearts rather than our intellects. The artist, if he chooses to retain his stature as prophet, must reassert his belief in man."

The essence of art should be beauty. But what beauty is, in the physical sense, no man has yet fathomed. It is like an electric current, we feel it, use it, know in a limited measure how to harness it, but we do not know what it is. There is a spirit behind beauty which is the cause of beauty. And that spirit has borrowed from the past and will project itself into the future.

But, asserting the fundamental right of the artist to use his medium as an emotional language has made many artists push the personal expression to the utmost verge of eccentricity. The artist often deals in lyrical deformations and enigmatic symbols. Many exhibitions give the impression that modern artists take no delight in their own work and that they suffer from a lack of enthusiasm. Does art reflect the confusion of our age? Or are deformations the result of the emotionalism of an overtired brain, or hypersensitive artist who sees exaggeration in the world we live in?

Much of the best modern art, for all its seeming novelty and militant consciousness, is deeply rooted in the art of the past. Van Gogh's borrowing from old Japanese prints, Rouault's borrowings from early stained-glass windows, Picasso's from ancient Greek sculptures, through the painting of El Greco, to masks of African tribes, have all been pointed out in exhibitions and critical writings.

It is evidently not necessary to "sell" modern art to the public. Instead it has become necessary to show the public which is interested primarily in modern art that earlier art expressions are not the remote and lifeless relics that this public seems to think; but the best examples are indeed

Memories Of Tel Aviv

BY ABBEY COHEN, 4654 HUTCHISON STREET, MONTREAL

(Abbey Cohen is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Cohen, 4654 Hutchison Street, Montreal, and is married to the former Miss Edith Krauss, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Markus Krauss, of Tel Aviv.)

A world famous traveller once told me that nobody could visit Israel without experiencing a strong emotional feeling about the country. In no city did I find this to be more true than in Tel Aviv, the first entirely Hebrew City in the whole world. Here there is intense activity everywhere in the building of new homes, new hospitals and new industries. One has the feeling that no matter how bad the political or economic situation may be, no matter what hardships the people have to suffer, Israel must and will continue to grow. It was with a feeling of pride and admiration that I watched the work going on, day by day, in all parts of Tel Aviv.

It gives one coming from the Galut a real thrill to walk through streets guarded by Jewish policemen, to see the mail being delivered by Jewish postmen, and to find Jews even working at such unlikely jobs as street cleaning and ditch digging. Even the beggars on the street corners are Jewish. To me seeing them was one of the most shocking and disappointing experiences of my entire trip.

Concentrated mostly around the central bus station were dozens of these beggars, sitting on the sidewalks in indescribable filth, their hands outstretched for charity. A large number of them displayed horrible oriental diseases that were a nightmare to look at. Most of them appeared to be young, able-bodied men who had been practicing begging as their profession in the oriental countries they had come from and who would not reconcile themselves to working for a living. This feeling against work was also to be found among some of the newer immigrants who preferred to deal in easy blackmarket business rather than go out and do farm work, which is so urgently needed by the country now.

Allenby Road is the main street of Tel Aviv, and here one could see, already in the process of completion, many modernistic new offices buildings. One on the corner of Achad-Haam near Allenby impressed me by its beautiful stone front and well planned design. This building would be considered large even by American standards. It had rooms for over 100 offices and space for many large shops on the ground floor. Nearby work had started on the demolition of Herzlia High School, the first High School founded in Tel Aviv, which was to be moved to a new location and its grounds were to be used to house a new office building which is to be the biggest in Israel.

Turning up Allenby along the sea, one comes to a number of famous hotels. One of them, the Keete-Dan, which used to be the headquarters for the United Nations in Israel, was building a large annex to accommodate the increased flow of tourists. Continuing up the sea coast one could see the outline of the new Mondial Plaza hotel, by far the largest in Tel Aviv, an immense structure visible from miles out at sea. Day by day it grew bigger and more beautiful as dozens of workmen went about their tasks with a skill that was amazing to behold. Especially so when one considers that these men never had an opportunity to work at the building trades in the countries they lived in before coming to Israel. I wonder how many Jewish bricklayers or stone-cutters there are in America here today?

A large park had been set aside by the Municipality, adjoining the hotel, and within a matter of months the whole area had been transformed from a barren desert of sand dunes and rocks overlooking the sea to a refreshing oasis of palm groves and pine trees interspersed with lawns of green grass and beautiful tropical flowers. Dozens of gardeners were involved in transplanting these trees and rare plants from the surrounding dunes more in making paths through the park, ornamental pools and steps, and erecting a playground for the children. At its completion the park

Canadian Job: Recognition Of The Full Meaning Of The Adjustment Of Immigrants

Excerpt from a special paper, prepared for the National Seminar on Citizenship, held under the auspices of the Canadian Citizenship Branch, Department of Citizenship and Immigration, at Scarboro, Ontario, May, 1953

BY SAUL HAYES, OF MONTREAL, NATIONAL EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, CANADIAN JEWISH CONGRESS

Let us draw on our own experience for supplementary evidence of how the newcomer has fiitted into the economic life of his new country. Who in the larger cities has not been impressed with its daily indications? Let us take some very homely examples — espresso cafes, bakeshops of Hungarian, Roumanian, German and Austrian specialties, hand bag stores, clerks in the five and ten cent stores committing some "gaffe" but excusable because of the knowledge that a newcomer was trying to fit herself into a new role. What householder needing an electrical job, or a paint job, has not come face to face with an immigrant who has been here less than three years? What business man has not been called upon by a salesman with some difficulty in expressing himself in English or French? What housewife has not known of the European domestic? The evidence is on all sides. The number of foreign sounding names and accents is by now so aeceptable that we take for granted something that really is fairly new — a very rapid economic integration of the newcomer. Perhaps the same general impact on the economic life of the rural community is similarly obvious.

Most immigrants have chosen to apply for Canadiam permits in order to obtain an economic advantage presumably impossible in their homelands. Oniy an infinitesimal minority have chosen to emigrate because they prefer the Canadian (or for that matter, that of the United States) political or social syste mto their own. The vast majority of Englishmen who emigrate do so because of the shortage in austerity-ridden England or because of their fears that large scale unemployment must inevitably be a chronic illness where plant is obsolescent and where the results of two wars have changed the economic structure of the land. The workers did not need G.D.H. Cole to tell them the facts of life.

The German emigrates because he cannot be sure that he will soon witness the commercial and industrial resurgence of his country and in the meanwhile he cannot support his dependents. The displaced person emigrates because he has absolutely no economic security as a displaced person. The Dutch farmer is encouraged by his own government to emigrate because of his country's overpopulation the results of which can no longer be compensated by the increment of colonial dividends. We should like to think that the economic man in the emigrant is not his altar ego and that the compultion to emigrate is based on loftier motives of the relative values of the social and political systems. This does not square with the facts as this writer knows them and little would be gained by refusing to accept the basic urges which possess the emigrants.

In any event, it can be concluded that whatever the motives, simple or complex, unitary or farrago, pure or les pure, our immigrant wants to fit into the economic life of this country and is giving a very good account of himself in so doing, to his own ad-

Poor Little Hill!

You're looking at a very discouraged hill!

Ever since that ribbon of paving outlined it, it has been a challenge to motor cars.

For miles and miles it winds up the side of a mountain, and it has sharp curves and steep grades that spring out of little curves so a driver can't get a start.

Halfway up, there's a watering place—just there so drivers can stop and refill their radiators.

Yes—it has been quite a hill. But not any more!

The driver of the car in the picture above took off at the base and sailed right up to the top—and never gave it a thought.

You see, he's driving a 1953 Cadillac—with its great high compression 210-horsepower engine—and its vastly improved Hydra-Matic Drive.

We recently received a letter from a man who drove from Florida to Windsor, Ontario—in a 1953 Cadillac.

The driver of the car had made this trip before—and as they neared Kentucky he said to his passenger: "Now we are going to have a hill between here and Lexington."

After an hour or so, the passenger said: "Where is the hill?"

And the driver said: "Just wait."

So they waited—and presently they saw a sign which read "Lexington."

The driver was dumfounded.

"I can't understand it," he said. "There used to be a hill there—a big one! I know from experience."

* * *

Naturally, this great car gives you more than the ability to master hills.

When you float along with a tremendous reserve like this, you have the smoothest, quietest, easiest ride it's possible to imagine.

It gives you confidence, too—and helps you to relax—for you know you have the power for any emergency that may arise.

It makes the whole car a symphony in motion. In fact, the ride is so smooth and soothing that, not infrequently, passengers sleep as they ride.

Come in and try it for yourself. The car is waiting—and it's an experience you ought not to forego.

Dear Friends:

We, those representatives of the three major Faiths of Toronto, have embraced and are helping direct the new organization for boys known as the Knothole Club. As the name implies, the Club plans, firstly, to arrange for large groups of boys to attend several of the Maple Leaf baseball games this season. Following this, other projects in the interests of the young will be considered and developed.

The aims and purposes of the Knothole Club are as follows:

1) The promotion of good sportsmanship—clean thought, clean speech, clean sport.

2) The cultivation of good citizenship
—respect for law and order
—appreciation of the individual, irrespective of creed, color or national origin.

3) The development in our boys of the following specific habits:
a) to play the game for the game's sake
b) to be generous in winning and graceful in losing
c) to accept gracefully the decision of the officials
d) to believe in the honesty of the opponents
e) to conduct themselves at all times with honor and dignity
f) to recognize and applaud honestly and wholeheartedly the efforts of team-mates or opponents, regardless of creed, color or national origin.

We call upon men of goodwill in Ontario, men who are interested in the welfare and unity of the Canadian people and who understand that these can be achieved by their early cultivation in the habit patterns of our children, to join us in this work.

Sincerely,
Rev. J. N. Fullerton, Rev. Ray McCleary,
Rabbi Reuben Sussman.

EXCLUSIVELY CANADIAN...

Nature has endowed the Canada Goose with keen vision, sharp hearing, and a speed of flight often reaching sixty miles an hour. Each spring and fall, large V-formations of these graceful water-fowl are seen in migratory flight, their weird "honking" call a familiar sound on the Canadian air.

Created and signed by The House of Seagram, this advertisement, with appropriate copy for foreign lands, has appeared in magazines and newspapers printed in various languages and circulated throughout the world.

Seagram TELLS THE WORLD ABOUT Canada

This advertisement was designed by The House of Seagram to tell the people of other lands about Canada and things exclusively Canadian.

Many people in Latin America, Asia, Europe and other parts of the world are not fully aware of the richness of Canada's natural resources, wild life, scenic beauty and cultural traditions. The more the peoples of other lands know about our country, the greater will be their interest in Canada and Canadian products.

The House of Seagram feels that the horizon of industry does not terminate at the boundary of its plants; it has a broader horizon, a farther view—a view dedicated to the development of Canada's stature in every land of the globe.

foot fatigue at 5 o'clock?

try DR. LOCKE shoes

Many women find 5 o'clock to be the "deadly hour" . . . the time when overworked feet rebel, hurt and swell. But 5 o'clock can be a gay hour — a ready for play hour — if your feet are in a happy mood. Treat YOUR feet to the shoes that treat you tenderly all day long . . . gently cushioned Dr. Locke shoes.

ENJOY YOUR COOKING ... AND YOUR FOOD!!
We've two things in mind when we design a Clare Brothers range.
First of all it must cook food so that it tastes better than it ever tasted before. Next it must be a range that gives you perfect control of the heat you use for cooking.
So you'll find that everything on a Clare Brothers range works towards these ends. It has a Clare Brothers "Properly Proportioned" oven carefully worked out to give an even, diffused heat, blanketed with three layers of insulation. It's the sort of an oven that cooks a roast and leaves the goodness in, that will make an angel cake really heavenly. You'll find it gives you perfect control of the surface elements, one with a variety of heats and speeds that help you cook exactly the way you've always wanted to. There are the ranges that work like that, too, because they're so beautifully built they offer you value for the money.

LA PROVINCE FRANÇAISE DU CANADA

Welcome, indeed, Mesdames et Messieurs! We, of La Province de Quebec, look forward with genuine pleasure to greeting you as our guests. We are sure you will enjoy the relaxation, the gracious living of our lovely and historic old province. For, amid the upheavals of modern times, we have been able to retain the tempo, the true atmosphere of Old France in America.

Here, we have cities and towns as up-to-the-minute as today's newspaper. But we have others whose venerable spires, peaked roofs and quaint streets and places look back to the days of the Kings of France and the Court of Versailles; to fearless voyageurs and heroic missionaries who carried civilization and the fleur-de-lis to the far-flung corners of all North America.

Our shrines and battlefields, our sea and lake bathed mountains, our forests and streams, our glens and fjords, our very way of life, all beckon to you, to everyone who passes our picturesque portals to enjoy a French-Canadian vacation.

In town and country alike, enjoy the comfort which is yours at our larger hotels, our smaller hostelries and our pensions, all so typically French.

Uncounted thousands of lakes gleam like jewels amid the unspoiled forests of La Province de Quebec. Here every kind of fish abound to try the angler's skill. Game speckled trout in the clear, ice-cold streams rushing down the mountain sides. Land-locked salmon in Lake Memphramagog, ouananiche and sturgeon in Lake St. John, lake trout in the beautiful lakes of the Laurentians, salmon in the many rivers falling into the St. Lawrence on the North Shore and in Gaspe, black bass nearly everywhere. Now is the time to arrange for your summer vacation—write today to the Provincial Publicity Bureau, Parliament Buildings, Quebec City. Tell us what kind of accommodation you want and we will send you maps and helpful information.

LA PROVINCE DE Québec

For help planning your vacation, for map and illustrated booklets, write the Provincial Publicity Bureau, Parliament Buildings, Quebec City, Canada; or 48 Rockefeller Plaza, New York City 20.

Dairy Foods

are so nutritious

yet so inexpensive

Milk and dairy foods supply more of our nutritional needs than any other food group. Flavour-full alone or in combination, dairy foods are sure to please — they are always taste-tempting and appetizing.

Include plenty of dairy foods in your daily menu — three glasses of refreshing wholesome milk, plenty of smooth golden butter, wedges of tangy cheese, matchless cream and ice cream desserts, cooking and baking made rich and smooth with milk powder and evaporated milk.

THE KOSHER SALAD & COOKING OIL

For many years chefs, in all parts of Canada, have shown a preference for MAZOLA—connoisseurs of delicious, salad dressings or mayonnaise appreciate the fine quality of Mazola. Mazola, made from sun-ripened corn, mixes easily with other necessary ingredients and imparts a distinctive and delightful flavour to salad dressings.

Mazola is unexcelled for deep frying or sautéing and is most economical to use, as it can be used over and over again without carrying the odor or flavour of one food to another.

Have you tried the new 'Quick 'n' Easy' Pastry Method — for finer, flakier, more delicious pastry? Send for recipe folder to Jane Ashley, The Canada Starch Company Limited, P.O. Box 120, Montreal, P. Q.

vantage and to the general good of the entire community. The adjustment would be happier indeed if the housing shortage did not make rents so high and if wages were not cut down to size by the continuing high prices for necessities.

One rather happy situation exists these days which did not in former periods of immigration. Provincial laws regulating various industries, minimum wage laws, unionization and other factors have all but guaranteed a great many newcomers a very good start in their new economic life. There are fair employment practices codes in Manitoba, Ontario and Saskatchewan and similar legislation for fields of federal jurisdiction now exists in the federal law, "An Act to Prevent Discrimination in regard to Employment and in regard to Membership in Trade Unions by reason of Race, National Origin, Colour or Religion." The social and economic effects in this milieu are enormous. Exploitation does exist in marginal occupation and in the unskilled (and, therefore, unprotected) areas but the demand for labour has to a large extent been a salutary corrective. Taken on balance, the economic situation enables newcomers quickly to take their places and the newcomers have in fact largely adapted in a satisfactory manner.

In turning to the social factors of the immigrant's reconciliation we turn to an admittedly more difficult subject. Canada is not a homogeneous state. It is a bilingual and bicultural state. To go even further, it can be said that the historic position of the preservation of the French-Canadian culture has engendered a hospitable attitude towards all cultures different from the majority one. Assimilation is not the price of admission to Canada. This is the first factor of consequence in the social integration of newcomers. There is a corollary to this: multiple cultures can grow in the Canadian sociological climate. There must, however, be some goal, however elusive it may be, of maintaining such social development and yet avoiding the always present danger of insularity, of isolation, of clannishness.

We now have two propositions the values of which must be discussed: a) Canadian political and social history have moulded Canadian character so that a monolithic culture is not required as a stamp of equal and good citizenship. b) The cultural pluralism of Canadian life, if carried to an unrestresults impeding the growth of the Canadian people.

The next avenue of enquiry must be a recognition of what we expect social adaptation to lead to. Is the goal simply the ready acceptance by Canadians of the newcomers? Is it more than this? Is it the studied process of a colouration of beliefs and ideas? Is it something of each? We can, I believe, add a third proposition for consideration. c) There is no one formula, nor is there one pattern. The general aim would be for the immigrant to obtain a firm belief in the way of life which characterizes the Canadian people and to set about making the social adjustment for himself and family which will enable him to achieve this. It will be a steady process for some, it will be a difficult and slow one for others, and it will be relatively simple for the favoured few.

The attention of welfare workers, government officers, leaders of national organizations and of good citizens in general, will be focussed on just how the social factors of integration can be hastened, or at least somehow injected, so that the newcomer, with great happiness for himself and profits for the country of his choice, will really become part of its woof and warp.

It would be an interesting experiment to corral all the immigrants who arrive during a given five-year period and put them through some specially constructed integration machine. Something for example which Aldous Huxley or George Orwell could have invented or which Lister Sinclair could have devised for a radio play. This machine comes with a full guarantee that a 100% Canadian will be turned out. What would this creature be like? Would he have read more books by Canadians about Canada than his neighbour whose Canadian line is nearly two hundred years old? Would be shudder at the Americanization of Canadian culture? Would he be ready for leadership in the service clubs which dot the Canadian scene? Would he be able to curl and would he want to root at hockey games? Would he applaud the Massey Report? Would he be ashamed of Canadian arts, crafts, and general culture? Fortunately, these questions and others which readily suggest themselves, need not be answered and the idea happily dies prematurely. There is no integration process. There are people of various moods, temperaments, inclinations, habits, prejudices, cultural background. There are various suggestions and ideas which form part of integration processes. Using propositions as a springboard one is able to jump into the area of specific factors in the social adaptation of the immigrant.

1.—La[illegible] l' [illegible]ffice

communication without the means to do so. If we are ready to accept the child as the father of the man, then the school becomes the first of the prime factors. Business and routine social contacts are auxiliary forces. Language in and of itself is not an answer. Language represents the means to achieve an end, it is not the end itself. Moreover, in too many cases the acquisition of English or French has not the importance it should have. Its value is attenuated if the worker spends his day at the bench conversing only with his Polish co-workers and then goes home to continue in Polish. This man's chances of good social contacts are slim. If the housewife's duties keep her at home from morn till midnight, save only for a shopping expedition; then her only social contact will be in a supermarket.

2.—Neighbours: The motion picture scenario of a Czech newcomer surrounded by suspicious neighbours whose hostility he finally overcomes and whose friendship he finally gains, makes a good movie but hardly mirrors the life of the average newcomer. In big cities it is hard for neighbours to be much of an asset in the various processes of immigrant integration. The most we can hope for is understanding and by means of unobtrusive and indirect education some impact will be made.

3.—The Church: Church authorities are also busy people. There are, however, communions and certain individuals who find the position of the newcomer a matter of great concern. The church can indeed be a very useful factor and many an immigrant can attribute his introduction to Canadian mores to the church's extended hand. The church in rural and small urban areas is in an even more favourable position and has given some very important assistance to the newcomer.

4.—General Influences: The social factors also include the "taken for granted" resources of the newspapers, the radio, and the movies. It is not really a matter of deciding whether the influences are always good ones. It is a matter simply of recognizing that they exist. It is easy to wince at Coca-colonization or to sneer at our hygienic civilization, "Americans lead spotless lives, their homes as antiseptic as their wives!" This is nevertheless part of the Canadian scene. The newcomer, if he is to be as other Canadians, will be somewhat affected by the Age of Advertising. These are as much the factors in social integration as are art galleries, Town Hall meetings or extension courses, they are also much more pervasive.

It is time to pause and wonder at what help the newcomer can [illegible] of influences at work but it will not be the intention to catalogue even a fraction of them. It might be of use to examine three major areas of responsibility and superficially to enquire in what ways socially acceptable channels can be charted:

A—Government: The Citizenship Branch has perhaps the major responsibility in initiating positive action. The May 3rd — 6th 1953 conference recognizes this and the officers of the Department daily concern themselves with this very problem. One would like to pose a number of questions:

1.—The foreign language press: Can a well-planned programme of news items and stories of interest to newcomers reach a sizeable immigrant public through the foreign language papers? Is a useful service in Canadian "indoctrination" possible through such means?

2.—Mass Education: Since an immigrant's social adaptation depends also on acceptance by the public of the immigrant, is enough being done through the media of mass education — radio, films, newspapers? If the nation's well-being depends upon the creation of a citizenry well adapted to Canadian life in its many aspects, should not more attention be given to the problem of immigrant integration? Should not the National Film Board, C.B.C., CAB, newspapers be stimulated by the Citizenship Branch to do much more in the field of mass education?

3.—Citizenship Day and Citizenship Ceremonies: It is difficult to achieve a nice balance between the understatement which characterizes official action in Canada and exaggeration which it obtains in the United States. Many Canadians shudder at the musical comedy overtones of some of the chauvinistic displays which attend citizenship ceremonies or observances of "I Am An American Day", in certain areas of the United States. These same Canadians are also dismayed at the drab, unimaginative and uninspired programme of these same ceremonies in Canada.

Cannot the Citizenship Branch experiment with programmes so as to elevate the meaning of Canadian Citizenship? Is not the acquisition of citizenship itself a powerful factor in the processes and, therefore, worthy of something more dramatic and meaningful than a routine recognition that it exists? Cannot a competition be held soliciting ideas for Citizenship Day observances and programme for the ceremony of citizenship?

4.—Voluntary Agencies: The Department has offered all kinds of services to voluntary agencies. The establishment of liaison officers is just such appreciation of [illegible] ac-completed. Is this enough? Should not an active campaign be initiated calling upon all associations and public spirited organizations to include programme related in some way to the social acceptance of immigrants and assistance to them on their way to Canadianism? Could not model programmes be sent to the myriad of service clubs, welfare organizations, recreational associations and similar groups? Could not an active campaign to sell such ideas be urged?

These questions may presuppose little is being done. This would be misinformation since quite a lot is accomplished. On the premise, however, that one of the very vital tasks in Canadian life is to integrate the newcomer, additional ideas must be studied and a critique made of programme. The questions are but an introductory step to these goals.

B—Welfare Agencies: In this group are found the social service and the recreational agencies. The principal obstacle to programme of aid to the immigrant in his social adaptation, is budget. Practically all welfare agencies receive their annual operational budget from some unified fund raising device—community chest, welfare federation, or the like. No communities are supporting such drives to the extent of 100% of the budget so that no place is found by individual agencies for the cost of special programme on behalf of newcomers. If the newcomer makes his own adjustment he can find resources within the recreational programme of a given organization but he has to take it at its established level which is aimed for the entire community. Perhaps a much closer liaison ought to exist between welfare agencies and the Citizenship Branch for implementation of a serious long range policy of acceptance of responsibility in this common task of the immigrant's integration.

C—Voluntary Groups: A great deal of good work is done by groups and individuals to accelerate the immigrant's acceptance in the Canadian community. This is indeed very useful work and if its results cannot be measured by calipers it is not the less real. The task which leaders in the work have to assume is to interest more and more service clubs, coordinating committees, sub-committees of YM & YWCA's, Junior Leagues, and the host of other associations which have a high sense of public duty. If a concerted plan were adopted calling upon such organizations to accept some programme to help newcomers to adjust to their new [illegible] a great many more projects could be initiated [illegible] the services of their paper either to [illegible] the organizations [illegible] worked programmes but the public should be adequately [illegible] ed in any seminar discussion. Part of Canadian life is the large membership of clubs, groups, agencies, associations of one kind or another. All have programmes and all are dedicated to public service. It should not prove to be a herculean task to enroll many of these in the programme of assisting newcomers in their social integration.

Summary statement of problems and other factors in immigrant integration:

1.—The economic and social factors in the integration of the immigrant are a part of his everyday existence. In many respects the social and economic adjustments to be made are the same as for Canadians, only more so. If a Canadian is an American in less of a hurry, then our newcomer is well on his way to becoming a Canadian.

2.—The fear of the stranger and the hostility towards him retard the integration of the newcomer. As a wise social scientist once observed, name-calling is a little man's way of dodging social issues. Every Canadian can help the newcomer become a good Canadian and curb this deleterious hostility for refraining from name-calling.

3.—Conversely, newcomers are afraid of the superior attitude of Canadians which inhibits them from accepting the helping hand that is often extended and the wise counsel available.

4.—Immigrants are people! An immigrant group will have its share of geniuses and unintelligent, saints and sinners, sophisticated and primitive. The immigrant is not immune from the vagaries of genetics.

5.—Canadian policy-makers and those charged with responsibilities in related fields should accept the introduction of new cultures which, if no alien political overtones colour them, actually enrich our lives.

6.—Canadianism, whatever it may actually mean, does not mean a frozen mould of ideas. It means a set of ideas constantly changing to meet a constantly changing world. These can be accepted in the integration processes of newcomers as they must also be accepted by sons of the pioneers.

7.—The processes are quickly realized by some newcomers, more slowly by others and are completely missed by still others.

8.—Generally speaking, the processes are matters of individual adjustment which can be accelerated by planned assistance from private, quasi-public and public sources. Such assistance can also do much to remove some of the difficulties.

9. Canada's [illegible] activity [illegible] integration which has been made during the past eight years by immigrants

10.—The proximity of the United States is a very influential factor: a) prosperity in the United States affects Canada's prosperity; b) deflation or recession in the United States must affect Canada's economy; c) emigration from Canada of Canadians and immigrants has been a constant feature of Canadian demography; d) the social impact of the folkways of the United States upon Canadians is constant. All of this conditions the immigrant as well as the Canadian.

11.—Canada must live by immigration. It is the job of government and public spirited citizens outside of government to recognize its full meaning and the concept of the adjustment of immigrants.

The story is told of a seminary student who studied and studied day in and day out for many years. At the conclusion of his studies, he ran up and down the street shouting, "I have the answers, all the answers. Will someone please help me, I'm looking for the questions." We admit the roles are reversed and we find too many questions but not enough answers. Our efforts must be devoted to a continuous search for them.

duates for the promotion of individual economic conditions.

Pogroms and oppression brought large scale emigration and a new emphasis on trade training. ORT could equip one for a new life abroad. The program went into high gear. Vocational schools were organized in Vilna, St. Petersburg, and Bialistok, new classes were added, old classes enlarged, existing schools subsidized and the number and variety of courses multiplied. More than 100,000 apprentices were enrolled in supplemental evening schools. Along with these developments was what might well have been the first Bureau of Jewish Labor Statistics. The labor market was constantly under scrutiny and employment opportunities were uncovered, developed, and reported to the central placement office.

In the next seven years and until the shot at Sarajevo found its mark in the "Pale of Settlement", ORT was functioning in twenty major Russian cities. The "Pale of Settlement" was a buffer state and the buffeting came from both the East and the West. Again it was pack and run. The first D.P.'s of the twentieth century, their few personal belongings on their backs, their tools and machinery abandoned, journeyed eastward. Impoverishment was nearly complete. Further inland, however, these refugees found succor. ORT had opened emergency employment offices and 25,000 family heads were given work. Again machines, tools, and materials were furnished and "Help through Work" became the slogan of the day until the war dragged itself to a weary end. Even then the beaten and disheartened army had a task before it — the Revolution.

Strangely enough, the Revolution evoked echoes of Alexander III. Whereas, Alexander disliked Jews because they were Jews, the revolution disliked Jews not as Jews but as merchants, middlemen, superfluous classes. The New Russia needed workers, preferably agricultural workers, and it was up to the Jew to put down his quill and his account books and take up the plow and scythe. Other changes had been wrought. ORT, till now a Russian organization, entirely within the bounds of one country, now found that the Treaty of Versailles had moved those bounds and that new states had been carved out of what had been Old Russia. The cities were the same but the countries had either new names, or old names with new meanings. Striving for an independence beyond official treaties, nationalism was aroused to insure homogeneity and political unity. Mechanization became the key to insure economic independence.

The Jew's problem in these old yet new lands was to contribute to one or the other or both. ORT was faced with urgent calls for expanded services. Before those calls could be answered new sources of funds to replace those destroyed by war and revolution had to be found. To give substance to its new international role and to find answers to the questions of financing, in 1921 the World ORT Union was formed. ORT emissaries, Drs. Leon Bramson, David Lvovitch and Aron Syngalowski, its muchly tried Executive, circled the globe, seeking and making new friends and sympathisers for the Cause of ORT. The American ORT came into being in 1921 and Canadian ORT in 1946.

The ORT ideal, "Self-help", which conforms to the best thinking of modern sociology, caught the imagination wherever it was broached and men's groups, women's groups, young people's groups, labor groups and landsleit groups sprang up wherever the seed of ORT was planted.

In 1919 ORT headquarters moved to Berlin. The program in Russia, however, continued and with the help of the government 120,000 Jews became tillers of the soil. Tools and machinery, seed and instruction were furnished them. Later, when food shortages were conquered, the back to the land movement was supplanted by a back to the shop trend, ORT again was on hand to help. ORT's earlier experiences with cooperative workshops and stores stood in good stead. Vocational training schools were established and cooperative workshops and factories reactivated.

The Biro-Bidjan experiment was organized in part around a nucleus of two hundred ORT graduates and their families. Here too, ORT workshops, schools and cooperatives were established. ORT in Russia closed its doors some fifteen years ago when all social service agencies with affiliations outside of the country were taken over by the Soviet. Post-war reconstruction, both individual and governmental, found in ORT a vehicle for accomplishment. In Poland, Roumania, Lithuania, and Latvia one hundred and forty schools and cooperatives were furnishing the technicians needed to build the new lands.

In Poland and Bessarabia one hundred farm colonies received manpower and machinery. Low cost credits were made available and a legal aid system was devised to steer the new farmers through the maze of regulations and laws. ORT schools were regarded as models. The Technical Institute in Vilna, the Textile School in Lodz earned the highest regard of educators everywhere and in time this applied to the schools that grew up in Roumania, Hungary, and the Baltic States until the outbreak of World War II.

In Jewish history, not infrequently have those who bestowed help had to seek help. This happened in Russia in World War I and was now happening in Germany under Nazism. German Jewish professionals became the discharged and displaced and the language of instruction in the schools in Lithuania, England, and France became German. Tailoring and dressmaking were taught in Paris. The schools in the south of France taught agriculture.

ORT students were now abroad on all the highways, the sea lanes, on all the currents of travel. A thousand Kon-Tikis carried refugees wherever the tides ran to open ports the world over and always but a short distance in their wake was the ORT school. So it was that Shanghai boasted an ORT school where classes met throughout the Sino-Japanese war. So it was that ORT came to South Africa, to Argentina, Uruguay, Peru, Brazil, Cuba and elsewhere in Latin America. Here the emphasis was on agriculture, there on textiles, and in a third place on mechanics. Sao Paulo, the Detroit of Brazil, set up an ORT machine shop. A refugee camp in Canada prepared the newcomers for Canadian industry, and at Oswego, New York, fifty percent of the camp population were ORT graduates. ORT headquarters in itself was a refugee, taking flight in turn from Berlin to Paris, thence to the south of France, and finally to Switzerland but taking always with it its practical workable dream: "Help through Work".

Today there are 270 schools, workshops and laboratories spread over the Jewish communities of nineteen countries. Twenty thousand persons are in attendance, learning seventy-eight different industrial and agricultural skills. Annually, ORT's four thousand graduates meet eager employers on what might, figuratively, be termed the steps of ORT institutions. The list of ORT locales reads like some extravagant travel folder, Morocco, Tunisia, Algeria. The actualities in these lands are far from the roseate pictures that the imagination conjures up. In these lands, Jews, through all the years of the dispersal, have been living in circumstances that escape the powers of description. Infant mortality was fifty percent. Trachoma and tuberculosis were widespread and accepted with a shrug. Jews were at the very bottom of the economic ladder. Only a skill could free the Jews from centuries of grinding poverty. ORT today is providing that redemption.

In Israel today, ORT is replaying an old role but with more vigor and greater aspirations, building a new state. Thirty schools are teaching trades and vocational skills of all types. It will be a long time before the saturation point is reached in any one particular skill. Every graduate adds his or her contribution of technical know-how to the independence and economic sufficiency of the new state. If there were no ORT, one would have to be invented and an ORT program would have to be improvised.

In Canada, ORT came into being as a result of the inspiration and tireless efforts of Mrs. Leon D. Crestohl. Its immediate task was to help in the rehabilitation of Jewish war orphans of Europe. Three years later a men's group was organized to lend their efforts to securing machinery and tools for the [illegible] and to [illegible] and other points around the globe to situate a stone in its natural setting, so it would not be inconsistent that I should employ the features of rain and the moods of the atmosphere in my work.

With this in mind I created my "Crying Baby". I used grey Stanstead granite for, I felt, when it rained the wet stone takes on a tone appropriate to the idea I wished to express. This figure's lower eyelids were extended outwardly so as to catch the falling rain; incised lines along the cheeks led downward from the eyes so that the water overflowing from the eyes would roll tear-like down its face. I created two other pieces along the same principle which I titled, "Rain-drop Eater" and a "Reclining Figure," each of which when completed with base pedestal weighed one ton.

This phase of my work continued for six months. During this time members of the shop instructed me in the use of numerous fine points of carving technique. My work was not without its social contribution for I was soon accepted as a labourer in stone-masonry. It was indeed a stimulating experience.

Concurrent with this I was appointed sessional demonstrator for a class of the McGill University School of Architecture. This collective experiment was distinguished for its success in using a new medium which I employed, a "plaster-in-sand" technique of modelling. By the direct use of natural materials rich and interesting forms were produced.

Toward the end of last year, in what was to be my last teaching position before my departure for studies in Mexico, I was made instructor in drawing and painting at the Montreal Y.W.C.A. This was for not a few members of the class the first formal instruction they had received and I attempted to teach them the essentials of basic design by the use of natural objects: shells, coral, stones, animal bone, and so on.

I consider it fundamental to my philosophy of art and education not to alter or "doctor" a student's work. Each work, like the work of a professional artist, must be regarded as developmental, as an ever-widening and intense essay in self-realization. Artistic unfolding, as I see it, is an exteriorized endeavor toward the attainment of human wholeness, of that ultimate and inscrutable source of creation moving about its quest for making a perfect and whole image of its own, though unseen, harmony. In this sense all art is therapeutic and religious.

Though I was busily engaged in art education and in my own artistic work in various media, I undertook the organization of three one-man shows. I taught modelling at the Montreal Museum of Fine Arts' children's art classes and maintained an arts and crafts group at the Montreal branch of Habonim. Throughout my classes I have endeavored to emphasize the importance of understanding the use and the value of natural raw materials whose significance tends to fade away in a highly technological society and in large cities so far removed from the springs of nature.

I had long desired to visit Mexico, that strange land of mixed ancestry, heir of the vanished Mayan and Aztec civilizations. Quite unexpectedly, my opportunity arrived when the Institute Allende at San Miguel, perhaps the finest art school in the country, awarded me a year's scholarship for study in Mexico. Here again I saw the way in which nationalism in art can be successfully brought to mingle with the inheritance of other peoples and cultures. The meeting of diverse cultures need not be a disaster; it can be an opportunity. The Mexicans have recognized this; they have constructed an internationalist University City; there are many Jewish artists and architects in Mexico City, where a flourishing Jewish community exists.

Shortly before my departure for Mexico Dr. Lismer, in conjunction with the Montreal Museum of Fine Arts, organized a one-man exhibition of my sculpture at the Museum. I speak of this to point out that the show, because it was successful to me financially through the sale of numerous pieces, made me realize a need for sculpture in Canadian life, of sculpture that might adorn private houses and gardens, beyond the pale of museum walls.

Montreal is a beautiful city, and certainly a fertile soil for the flourishing of art. There are many public buildings which would afford artists with opportunities to adorn interiors with murals and bas-reliefs. How much more beautiful our own "Beaver Lake" would be were it ornamented with sculpture, and Park Lafontaine is ideal for out-of-door shows of plastic art. I recall to mind the new Jewish Public Library whose fresh, blank walls are an opportunity for embellishment. Life, like the many blank walls and empty walls and empty spaces about us, demands ornament, offered as prayers to that source which is true, beautiful, and good.

The eternal Jew has always sought to express himself in the language of universals, trying to catch the eternal and abiding within the flux of time, however many adjustments of spirit were demanded of him. We as a people have drunk deep of the spirit of timelessness: this is the heritage of our culture and the message of our prophets.

spirit; its rhythms are the rhythms of the unfolding of man in time. Nature has furnished us with seeds for creation, for she too is spirit. Art is the human in nature, a communication of person to person, throwing us ever-deeper to the Person who is Art, and Nature, and Spirit. ABOUT STAINED GLASS WINDOWS

The work of the matt is vital. It shades and lends texture. It "holds" the lines against the devouring light. It controls the light. Up to this point, unless specially designed to remain unpainted, our window is a raw kaleidoscope, a glare, a chaos. To restore order we must subdue some of the light. Some colors must be "protected" from others. Some need to be held back. Others should flash, or radiate, or sparkle, or taper, or glimmer through a soft haze. The matt designs the light into patterns of glowing places.

The painted glass is fired red-hot. Then all the pieces are assembled, leaded together, puttied; and the window is ready to be installed.

So much for the "process." Let us take a closer look. What does the glassman actually face? What is he trying to do? What is he, anyway — artist or craftsman? Ideally he is both. Indeed, he would find it hard to say where the art ends and the craft begins. Like any craftsman, he recognizes the laws of his craft and defers to them. He is also designing, making decisions affecting the design, almost every inch of the way. Glass can only be cut into certain types of shape; how reconcile this with the needs of the design? Blues are notorious for encroaching on neighboring colors: how keep the desired shade, yet curb its exuberance? Structural bars are necessary at fixed intervals, and strips of lead surround each color: how make friends with these possible intrusions?

Like any artist, he must choose his way amongst an infinity of possibilities — spiritual, emotional, intellectual, graphic. He must commit himself. Like any artist, he is trying to create a harmony. He juggles lines, masses, light and color into a "right" balance. But in stained glass the element of light is unique. It is the most powerful, the determining factor, the life of the work. Permeating the "obstructions" laid in its path, light creates the window, continuing to play its crucial role in the interior it illuminates.

Light takes a [illegible] In its action through color it is elusive, it is wanton, it mocks systematic theory. The honest veteran acknowledges a stubborn residue of mystery after a lifetime of experience and observation. Yet on the predictability of light hangs the fate of the window. Developed in a studio window facing a brick wall, how will it behave against green trees? And when the leaves fall? And in an east light instead of a north? In his understanding and manipulation of light the glassman is asserting the most individual feature of his craft.

Responsibility for a stained glass window does not end, as with easel painting, at the frame. The window is part of a room — not only as an architectural member, but as a dominating influence on the whole interior. This tampering with the very source of light, taken seriously, engenders great humility. A bad window is so much worse than a bad picture! (Its errors are so appallingly magnified — like a thoughtless remark picked up on a public address system.)

Humility, then, is called for. Also considerable self-discipline. Temptations that are legitimate and useful elsewhere must be carefully controlled here. Skill in three-dimensional, naturalistic-representation must be set aside; a window should not "bulge." Irresponsible "originality" or "free self-expression" can be downright indecent if they ignore existing windows in the room, or disregard the architect's intention, or violate the feeling inherent in the structure. Add "willingness to cooperate" to the glassman's pre-requisites. Yet there must be no compromise with the autonomy of art, or the artist's "obligation to the ideal"!

Here is perhaps the most baffling problem for today's glassman. Cooperate with whom? With the donor who loves pink? With the committee delegated to cut cost at any cost? The chance predilections of the town magnate? With the clergyman who wants a glass copy of a postcard, or another church's window? Often the designer is asked to "tone in" with ugly windows or a poor building. And legion are the tastes and desires which he is asked to incorporate and immortalize!

"Our president dislikes profiles, so please turn your figure around."

Or: "The saint should look like my great-uncle."

Or: "A member of our committee has an infallible color theory. We'd like the window to conform to it."

Sometimes the purchaser of a window, the architect or the committee chairman takes great pains to learn something of the nature of stained glass, its uses and its limits. Some [illegible] respect the amenability of a venerable craft, entrusting their ideas with difficult patience and restraint to interpretation by other minds and a strange medium. Such understanding or trust speaks as eloquently in a window as does the havoc wrought by uncomprehending intervention.

Other, more internal, occupational hazards beset the contemporary window. It has become enough of a business item to be subject to a certain amount of mass production, with all that this implies. Commerical competition, (its benefits notwithstanding) and commercial practices represent a very real threat to art and craftsmanship. Various shortcuts are now commonplace. Reversing, refurbishing or simply re-employing old designs. The use of stencils in place of invention and free handwork. Most modern of all: "farming out the flesh." Glass faces, fingers, arms and feet are sent away to an "expert" to matt, out of context, and return. Surely here is a new landmark in specialization.

What has happened since Chartres? Some say darkly, "the secrets of glassmaking have been lost." Something has indeed been lost; but it is not technical. And there have been gains too. Mostly, changes have happened — profound and far-reaching.

In medieval Europe, art had its very specific place. Its purpose was clear: to serve God. Its sponsorship, by a universal church, was certain and exalted. Its social and economic status was assured by the guilds. Conditions and standards of work were determined by the guild; the church gave identity to the mission of art and its meaning in life. In terms of church and guild, then, we may gain some insight into the special benevolent climate which nurtured medieval stained glass into such splendid bloom.

Let us consider the relation of medieval man to his cathedral. He emerged for Mass from his squat, dark dwelling into radiance and splendor that were unlike anything else in his knowledge or experience. The place of the church was focal in his life. It embodied his world, seen and unseen — his faith, his fears, his school, his law, his ultimate security. It also enlisted his labor. Its building was the community's proud concern. The craftsman played his part among the other participants. No room here for confusion or criteria among artist, sponsor and "public." The glassworker knew what was expected of him. This was to celebrate God in glass; to contribute to an atmosphere of awe and reverence conducive to worship. He was not asked for "free self-expression"; he expressed himself within fixed and generally accepted limits. We have every evidence for believing that his work was wholehearted, that he felt no basic doubts about what he was doing and why. His task did not conflict with prevalent ideas about God or art. There was a unity in the enterprise of building and adorning in which the artist's role was clear and taken for granted.

His relation to the guild was a healthy one. In its prime the guild was, among other things, something approaching the ideal in trade unions. It protected simultaneously craftsman, consumer and craft. It represented, as G.D.H. Cole puts it, "industrial self government . . . under a system of regulation in the common interest." "The craftsman worked within a clearly defined code of rules which had the object of safeguarding the independence, equality and prosperity of the craftsman . . . and of preserving the integrity and well-being of the craft by guarding the consumer against exploitation and shoddy goods." The guilds flourished during the greatest autonomy and strength of town life. They were close to municipal authority, sometimes overlapping or even constituting it. In their feudal setting, the guilds developed an extraordinary degree of equality and democracy. They even offered something like social security — covering relief for widows and destitute families, a kind of unemployment and health insurance, plus "town meetings"!

The craftsman's training started early. He was apprenticed at the age of, say, 10 or 12, advanced to the rank of journeyman, and finally to that of master craftsman. Needless to say he was by this time thoroughly imbued with every aspect of his craft. This goes far toward explaining the high standards that prevailed under the guilds. There was a true craft discipline—comparable, perhaps, to medical training today. Moreover, as the workshops, moving from town to town, were set up on the actual building site, the special light conditions affecting each window could be studied and put to use. Thus the medieval glassman knew light and color. He uniquely and comprehensively understood the laws of his craft — as is amply testified by the splendors he left behind him.

Conditions change. The social-political-industrial balance that had kept the guild a sound organism was gradually thrown off kilter. Guilds responded to the growing threat by becoming exclusive and dogmatic, helping to seal their own doom. Plagues, wars and the major dislocations that accompany change and progress completed the disruption of the guild structure. Flux of ideas and gradual secularization undermined the coherence and stability of the spiritual basis. Patronage changed and fluctuated whimsically. Artists began to flee the anonymity of corporation and sought individual response and credit. They turned to easel painting and other independent media, severing their connection with architecture, ending the sound relationship of a permanent art to its setting. General interest, understanding and participation lapsed.

When stained glass recouped in the fifteenth century after war and plague, it was under changed conditions. New discoveries enlarged its scope; new architecture developed fresh attitudes. Much that was beautiful resulted. But, to this writer, the craftsman's solid grasp of his medium was loosened. The golden age had spent itself. The seeds of long decay began to germinate.

Our age is also one of flux, of conflict and confusion. But it has its positive and stable forces with which we can align ourselves.

Today's artist isn't as "safe" as the medieval, but he is freer. He is unsafe in his insecurity and his anomalous position in an estranged world largely oriented toward the material, the technical and the streamlined. He is threatened by a prevailing urgency and speed. But he is bound by no inflexible code. He has free access to the ideas and standards of work of all ages. Research and experiment are not only legitimate, they are encouraged and endowed. Respect for the value of the individual's offering was never greater than in our culture. (Though understanding of what the artist produces is much hampered by our modern confusion of categories!) Today's glassman lives in an age of explicit architectural expression.

To the extent that he is able to "find himself" in the spiritual climate and the concrete challenges of our time, the glassman is once more coming into his own. Fine artists are rediscovering the nobility and power inherent in stained glass. Wonderful new expressions in glass are emerging — once more evoking a fitting atmosphere for worship, brightening and beautifying public building and private homes. New opportunities beckon — provocative, stirring new thought, promising new adventures in creation and beauty.

Non-artists can do much to bring to fruition the best of these impulses, or to starve out. The world — the free world at any rate — gets to a large extent the government and the art it "deserves." Good results involve good will and an enlightened interest, the ability to distinguish and freedom from prejudice. Objectivity is of the essence. Habit must not confused with tradition: every ugly window helps to bolster a self-perpetuating "style" or "trend." And a bad window is mighty hard to get rid of! Particularly a church window — and notably a memorial window — has an acquired "sanctity" that seems untouchable. A famous cathedral in London, foreseeing no deliverance from its Victorian monstrosities, deliberately and hopefully left its windows to be blitzed. They are now being replaced with fine contemporary work. This method is not to be counted on, however.

It remains to be asked: How should we look at a window?

Any single reply must say: Take your time.

Modern life tends to require that any message be "put across" or "sold" while it is being passed in a fast car. It must "attract" and "click." But in stained glass we have the antithesis of the taste thrill. It is subtle. It asks something. The riches of human beings, of ideas and of art are not to be received passively, at a glance. We must search them out. We must be "open" yet alert; we must give to them.

A window is not static. It plays its melody in time, responding to the differing touch of cloud and ray, of morning, afternoon, winter and spring. To the eye, fresh blinded by sunny street, it may not speak at all. Wait. It dies under the attack of "surface light" — electric or natural glare falling on its inner surface. Come back when the sun has "moved." Say "no, thank you" to the well-meaning destroyer who would turn on the lights for you. (Who would deliberately introduce static to accompany a symphony broadcast? If the leads show grey instead of black, the window is being artificially handicapped.)

If you would truly see a stained glass, relax. Close your eyes a moment. Walk about a bit. Look from different distances. Come again. Stay a while. It can be rewarding.

Our lives can always stand improvement but more so now. Where it lies in our power to improve our lot and guide our destinies, let us, with God's help, shape our future with undergirdings of a religious orientation to life, wherein the quest for knowledge and an ethical life go hand in hand.

May the New Year be the forerunner of manifold activities on behalf of God and our people. May you, our congregants, be strong, healthy, and steadfast in your devotion to our Torah. May we always be inspired to live by the strength of our convictions so that everyone will rise up and call us blessed.

alive, stimulating and fresh as the fine art of today.

In an age of torment, when expressionism, surrealism, and subjective painting, with emphasis on design, have confused people who need and demand art as an emotional necessity and a stimulus for richer living, the need is for simplicity. And just as Van Gogh painted with the directness of the primitive and simplicity of a child, so today Braeque, in his latest works in sculpture, resorts to the primitive.

Perhaps Picasso, the most controversial figure of the modern art world, sums up the present position in art, in a recent interview with the author Giovanni Papini: "In art the public does not search for consolation or exaltation, but the fashionable, the rich, the idle, look for the new, original, extravagant, and scandalous. And I, from my cubist period, on or thereabouts, have pleased owners and critics, with all the changing whims that passed through my mind, and the less they understood them the more they admired me. And by amusing myself with all these trifles, brain-teasers, puzzles, puns, and arabesques, I became famous very quickly. And celebrity for a painter signifies sales, profits, fortune, riches. And today, as you know, I am rich. But when I am alone with my thoughts, I have not the courage to consider myself as a great artist in the old and classic sense of the word. Giotto, Titian and Rembrandt were great; I am only a public entertainer, who understood his time and has practised to advantage by the imbecility, cupidity of his contemporaries. Mine is a bitter confession more valuable than it appears, but I have the merit of having chosen"

In this connection, it is interesting to note that in a relatively recent art exhibition at the Andre Weil galleries of Picasso's works, along with his cubist and ultra-modernistic paintings were two women's portraits, done in truly classic style and painted during the past few years. And with Picasso, as an example of an artist who inspired his epoch, one must conclude that in art, today, as always, one must look for permanent qualities. Art should give one a sense of exhilaration, a projection into the infinite beauties of life. For as Carlyle says: "All passes, art alone, enduring, stays to us. The bust outlasts the throne; the coin Tiberius."

was dotted with comfortable benches which allowed one a magnificent view of the Mediterranean Sea and the ships passing by. The gardeners had many problems to contend with, one of them being how to protect the beautiful palm trees from the strong winds that blow in from the sea. This they did by erecting tall steel poles covered with canvas to guard the trees during the stormy winters.

Nearby is the port of Tel Aviv. Unfortunately, Tel Aviv is open to the sea and has not got the protection of a harbour, such as Haifa, which is located in the bay of Acre. Therefore the ships must drop anchor a few miles out at sea and transfer their cargo and passengers to "Lighter Boats" which then come in to the small port through an artificial breakwater. There has been talk about making a long breakwater extending from Jaffa to Tel Aviv so that the big ships could dock right at the city. But I am afraid this will not be done for some time yet as it is a very expensive proposition. Work is going on, however, on extending and strengthening the present breakwater and modernizing the port facilities. New cranes have been erected and modern lift trucks and tractors are seen everywhere.

Not far from the port, work was also going on at the Lord Reading power station, where an addition was being made to increase the electric power to Tel Aviv. Two extra smoke stacks were rising up near the mouth of the Yarkon River which empties into the sea. This extra electrical power is sorely needed by the residents who are now required by law to limit the use of their electric stoves to a mere few hours a day.

Going inland again to the end of Rothschild Boulevard work had already started on a very ambitious program to build an auditorium for the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra. An area of two city blocks adjoining the famous Habimah Theatre, had been cleared for this purpose. Great care had been taken not to damage the famous old trees which were reputed to be over 500 years old, some of them being almost ten feet in diameter.

Geographically Tel Aviv is located about half way down the coast of Israel on the beautiful blue Mediterranean Sea. It is the central point for the network of roads and railways that lead to the three other principal cities in Israel, Haifa to the north, Jerusalem towards the east, and Beersheba to the south. Due to the excellent condition of the roads none of the above mentioned cities is more than an hour and a half drive from Tel Aviv by quick taxi service. The roads were originally built for small European-type cars and are considerably narrower than our American roads. They are extremely well planned and laid out with painstaking care by workmen who first lay a foundation of hand-placed rocks and then cover it with an asphalt coating.

Tel Aviv is fortunate in that the entire water-front consists of the most beautiful natural sand beaches in the country. Up to four and five years ago Tel Avivians used to enjoy these beautiful beaches practically at their doorstep and it was not an uncommon sight to see as many as twenty thousand people cooling off in the water on a hot day. At present, most tragically, the city sewerage pipes empty out into the ocean near the beaches and the water has been condemned as unsanitary to swim in. For the past four years the city authorities have been promising to remedy this deplorable situation by extending the sewerage pipes further out to sea, but to date nothing has been done.

As everyone knows, Israel is in the midst of an acute housing problem which has caused terrible overcrowding of the apartments now available. To get away from their oppressing home atmosphere Tel Avivians flock to the street cafes as their escape. Here they can relax over a cup of tea or a glass of gazoz (flavoured soda water) which is the national beverage. The management usually has copies of the latest American and European magazines and one can sit and read for hours without being disturbed. Different cafes have become popular with different groups of people, the most famous being the "Kassit" on Dizengoff street. Here all the actors, artists and so-called Bohemians usually gather after the shows at midnight and become involved in animated discussions.

During the day the Nimza on Allenby is frequented by idle young housewives who gather to show off their fineries and gossip. Over at the Tamar, on Sheakin Street, the tables are crowded with young children and their harried mothers who try to keep an eye on the youngsters while busily knitting away on their clothes. In the early evening the ex-servicemen and women like to get together at the Royal on Dizengoff Street and relive in memory their days of heroism during the war of liberation.

of world rebirth and of hopefulness. Despite the present sadness in the world, let us follow the men of Mount Everest, who through exemplary courage and heroism did the impossible in conquering Mount Everest. A New Zealand beekeeper and a Sherpa guide, when honoured for their recent remarkable achievement, were not concerned with the question, who got to the top first. The subject of priority was disposed of by the expedition's leader in memorable words: "You get to the top of a mountain only as a result of climbing with other people on a rope. It is not a matter who is first, second or last on the rope. Each has a particular job to do and one is bound to help the other."

Each of us must resolve to help conquer the Everest Mountain of present fear and gloom by asserting our natural adventurousness, by taking on responsibility and by working together hopefully for a new world. The golden age for humanity lies in the future, teaches Judaism. Indeed this Rosh Hashonah a world is born. May 5714 become for Israel and all mankind a world of new-born hope!

MARRIAGES

REICHERT-BARON

The marriage of Miss Joyce Melvia Baron, only daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Charles Baron, of Covington, Kentucky, and 865 Dana Avenue, Cincinnati, Ohio, to Jonathan Freiberg Reichert, younger son of Rabbi Victor Emanuel Reichert, of Rockdale Temple, in Cincinnati, and Mrs. Reichert, 752 Redbud Avenue, Cincinnati, took place on June 21, at half-past three o'clock, at Rockdale Temple, Rabbi Reichert officiating. The bride was given in marriage by her father. Her mother was the former Miss Charlotte Salzedo, R.N., of Montreal. The bride wore a gown of white Chantilly lace over satin, with a nylon tulle over-dress. Fashioned with a sweetheart neckline, and long, tapering, wrist-length sleeves, it had a form-fitted bodice, and a very full, bouffant skirt, with a cathedral train. The bride had a three-tiered nylon illusion veil, to the length of her train, held by a headdress of orange blossoms. She carried a family bible, with white orchids, stephanotis, and lilies-of-the-valley. Miss Carol Bachrach, the maid of honor, was in pale pink nylon net, with a very bouffant skirt. Her skull cap was of lilies-of-the-valley, and she carried a basket filled with roses, lilies-of-the-valley, and deep blue snapdragons. The bridesmaids, Misses Ann Newberger, Barbara Wolf, Emily Stix, and Frances Miller, wore similar dresses of pale pink, and had caps like that of the maid of honor, and carried bouquets in pink and white. Grace Salsedo Schreder, of Chicago, Ill., formerly of Toronto, Ont., was flower girl, in a matching miniature dress, of pale pink, with lilies-of-the-valley as a cap, and carried a basket of rose petals. David Reichert, elder brother of the groom, was best man. The ushers were: Philip Cohen, Richard Freiberg, Richard Pline, and Ronald Bennett Baron, twin brother of the bride. Junior ushers were: John and Richard Mendelsohn, and Robert and John Feibel. The decorations carried out the motif of a formal summer garden, styled with large Grecian urns with white flowers; a trellis banked with flowers; and an archway of deep red roses. Chamber music was played by an ensemble consisting of two violins and two 'celli, with an organ. One number was composed by Dr. Baron, the father of the bride. The bride's mother wore lavender shaded chiffon, with a matching hat, and carried orchids. The groom's mother was in a blue taffeta, with a navy-blue hat, and had a corsage of fleurs d'amour. A total of 1,500 synagogues has been constructed in Israel during the five years of statehood, bringing the number to 2,600, the Mizrachi (religious-Zionist) Organization of America reported. There are 270 rabbis serving as leaders and seven rabbinical lower courts as well as the Rabbinical Appeal Court in Jerusalem. Rabbi Mordecai Kirshblum, president of the Mizrachi Organization, explained that a substantial segment of the Israeli Jewish population adheres to the system of Jewish jurisprudence developed over a period of more than 4,000 years. The rabbinical court system, the only one of its kind in the world, deals with the application of Jewish Law for such residents. Not all of the synagogues built since the Jewish State proclaimed are permanent structures because of problems created by the scarcity of building materials in Israel. Construction of such religious facilities has been largely through the initiative of the Israeli Ministry of Religious Afairs, which provides for the religious needs not only of Jews but of Christians and Moslems in Israel as well.

While many people do not have good health, through no fault of their own, there are many more who could be much healthier than they are if they would follow the counsel of modern medical scientists in regard to general rules for good health through diet, exercise and the avoidance of such dangerous practices as overeating, exposure to contagion and fatigue.

Tradition Counts

The Queen's Own Rifles of Canada

One of Canada's crack infantry regiments, the Queen's Own Rifles was organized in 1860. Traditionally ready for instant call to arms ("In pace paratus — In peace-time prepared"), the Queen's Own have a record of distinguished service.

Beginning with the Fenian Raids, the men of this famous regiment fought in the Northwest Rebellion, the South African War and World War I. In the Second World War the Queen's Own led the D-Day assault on the Normandy beach-head and played a prominent part in the Canadian Army's sweep through France and Northwest Europe.

Proud of their glorious past, the Queen's Own Rifles are one of Canada's decorated regiments in which TRADITION COUNTS.
